

---

CAPT. MORRIS BROWN, whose obituary we publish this week, was a young man whose death is a grievous public loss, as well as an affliction of uncommon severity to his immediate relatives. He was a young man of the brightest promise, and qualified to fill an exalted position in either civil or military life. Such young men cannot well be spared. When they are stricken down, we begin to appreciate, the sacrifices required of us by this cruel war.

---